

Atlanta Thrashers J.P. Vigier 2003-04 game worn jersey, size 56.

Jean-Pierre Vigier spent four seasons at Northern Michigan University before signing as a free-agent with the Atlanta Thrashers. He began his professional career in the IHL with the Orlando Solar Bears, playing parts of two seasons with the Solar Bears and helping them win the Turner Cup in 2001. He also made his NHL debut during the 2000–01 season, one of only two games he played at the NHL level that year. Following the 2000–01 season Vigier joined the Chicago Wolves of the AHL. While with the Wolves he helped them win the Calder Cup in 2002, scoring 14 points in 21 play-off games. He split time between the Wolves and Thrashers before becoming an NHL regular during the 2003–04 season. This blue Koho home jersey from that season has the embroidered Thrashers secondary logo sewn on the front, two primary logo patches sewn onto each shoulder and the sewn matching fabric nameplate with two color twill letters on the back. Above the nameplate is a sewn on embroidered Koho logo patch. Player numbers, also in two color twill, are sewn on. The neckline also has the row of yellow arrows printed directly on the fabric. The NHL shield logo is embroidered directly to the rear hemline. The embroidered Thrashers Fifth Anniversary patch and the Dan Snyder memorial patch are both sewn on the front. The Meigray tag is sewn inside the rear hem. It has been photo matched to a photo of Vigier that accompanied the jersey. I obtained this jersey from an eBay auction.
