

Macon Whoopee Travis Dillabough 2001-02 game worn jersey, size XLG.

Peterborough, Ontario native Travis Dillabough was drafted by the Los Angeles Kings in the eighth round, #198 overall, in the 1993 NHL Draft. He chose to pursue a college degree first and played four seasons of Division 1 hockey at Providence College. Dillabough turned pro during the 1997-98 season with the ECHL's Huntington Blizzard. He played the next two seasons with the Dayton Bombers, logging only 36 games in 1999-00 due to injuries. Dillabough was acquired by the Arkansas RiverBlades in 2000 before landing in Macon in 2001. He appeared in 50 games during the 2001-02 season, his last season of professional hockey and the Whoopee's one and only season in the ECHL. Dillabough transitioned to the classroom after his hockey career, teaching high school in upstate New York. The front of this white with red and black trim OT Sports jersey is from the Whoopee's final season. It has the sewn on embroidered primary logo, a sewn on embroidered sponsor patch and a sewn on American flag patch. Secondary logos consisting of sewn two color twill fig leaves are sewn on each shoulder. The back and sleeves have sewn on two color twill numbers. The matching fabric nameplate has sewn on two color twill letters. The feathers in black and white are imprinted in the fabric, as is the OT Sports logo below the neckline. The neckline has what appears to be a fig leaf detail imprinted in the fabric. The player has autographed the back to the left of the number in black Sharpie. There is nice wear on the sleeves. I purchased this jersey from another collector.
