What do pets do when their owners leave? Are they secretly plotting to get rid of each other? Max is a dog living in New York with his owner Katie. One day, Katie brings home Duke, a big mean dog. Duke doesn't get along with Max, and drags him out of the house to get rid of him.

Max and Duke go on a terrifying but exciting adventure which brings them to many interesting places, including a bad guy's lair, a sausage factory, and many more. Where will they go and what will they find? Do you think they can return home? You can only read the book to find out!

The book leaves a wonderful message about the importance of friendship and cooperation and gives a special (rather inaccurate) look into what pets do when their owners leave the house. I would recommend the book to Children between ages 3-5; the vocabulary used in the book is limited but easily digestible. One note is that the book is part of a larger series, so you might want to check out the first book in the series first. The book's front cover should have the first book's name.
