The book is written for very early readers. The story rhymes as written by Dr. Seuss, he tells the reader of all kinds of things to think about, like the water is blue and birds are blue. He ask the reader to think about what you would do if you met a Jaboo. He has the reader thinking about all sorts of things, a ship on a long trip. He addresses to think about directions left and right, high and low. Very simply put to make the mind begin to wonder about things and realize that you can think about everything.

The book is full of silly pictures to illustrate the things you can think. The pictures are funny with eye catching expressions. Dr. Seuss is the all-time favorite author of beginning children's books with his uplifting characters to illustrate the story. Great learning book which can be read to children at a very early age or to a group of children.

One of the all time favorite authors of children's book has brought out the experience that you have the power to think about all kinds of things. It encourages the children to ask questions about all their thoughts. This is where the why, why, why, comes from in early childhood development and who is better to illustrate the why period than Dr. Seuss.

The book is written in easy to read format. The subject content is very short and simple. I would definitely recommend this book for beginning readers and to be read aloud to the toddler just learning to speak, or pre-school group reading. The brings out laughter of the imagination of what you are able to think about.
