

European Settlers aren't Responsible for Bringing Disease to the Americas

Early American history has been re-written by liberal sources and many Jewish sources who love painting a picture of Europeans being responsible for carnage death. Early European visitors to America had a heightened level of person hygiene, were further educated, and more civilized than the American Indian which already abode the America's. This is simply a fact; it's called Verity, or truth. The natives had a disparate style of living as nomads. For instance, they didn't keep domesticate animals on certain plots of land which may have been divided by fences. Europeans settled land to make pastures and gardens. The American Indian had a didn't way about them which must be respected and it's unfair to negatively judge people we may not have fully understood. Nevertheless, Europeans brought numerous livestock, agriculture, and metals tools that transformed the natives lives in a positive manner.

Diseases

Europeans aren't fully responsible for bringing diseases to the New World which, as we're told, decimated whole populations of Native Americans. In an article authored by John Noble Wilford, (10/29/02), he writes:

“The epidemics that resulted have been well documented. What had not been clearly recognized until now, though, is that the general health of Native Americans had apparently been deteriorating for centuries before 1492.

That is the conclusion of a team of anthropologists, economists and paleopathologists who have completed a wide-ranging study of the health of people living in the Western Hemisphere in the last 7,000 years.

The researchers, whose work is regarded as the most comprehensive yet, say their findings in no way diminish the dreadful impact Old World diseases had on the people of the New World. But it suggests that the New World was hardly a healthful Eden.”

We know that entire civilizations in South America like the Aztecs and Mayans had already vanished by way of disease. Even in Plymouth Massachusetts where the Pilgrims landed and befriended the natives, first landed in the seemingly deserted lands of Cape Cod and Plymouth. Huge populations of American Indians had recently been wiped-out diseases just prior to the arrival of Europeans. This granted the Pilgrims safety as it was effortless to befriend the small population [*1] of natives which remained a few miles inland,), but the coastal areas had no Indians remaining except for the occasional corpse

[*1] Though most the natives recently perished by way of disease, they still vastly outnumbered the Pilgrims but one European invention, a weapon, kept the Pilgrims safe besides their friendly offer of friendship. This rifle was more powerful and deadly than Indian arrows and spears. The natives were in awe of this weapon and greatly feared the European rifle.

What the European Brought to the Americas

Horses, pigs, grains,

Environmental revolution, crops like wheats, barely, oaks, seeds even weeds like the dandelion were brought from Europe, They brought cows which vastly multiplied. The cattle vastly multiplied which so much land to roam. Honey bees. Garden develop into plantations which grew huge amounts of apple trees and other fruits.

Meat was nowq so abundant and cheap in America the Europeans settlers became the best fed people in the entire world.

Shaun Prario, author and founder of The Verity Outlet