National Women's Month

Elizabeth Schuyler Hamilton

With everything going on in today's society sometimes, we fail to realize exactly where helping people began. Although the term community service has several meanings it all comes down to the same focal point of helping others and that it is unpaid. March is National Women's month and today we are going to look in the past at Elizabeth Hamilton. Elizabeth Hamilton is the wife of founding father, Alexander Hamilton and although she did not receive much credit, she was behind various political essays of Hamilton, corresponded with heads of state, and raised a large family. After Hamilton's death Elizabeth began working with many charities. She and two other women founded the Orphan Asylum Society, New York City's first private orphanage, in 1806. She served as second directress and first directress raising funds, collecting donated goods, and supervising the care and education of at least 765 children. Elizabeth Schuyler Hamilton lived to be 97 years old.

Helping others brings not only happiness to those that receive help but those that are helping as well, it is not something that someone forces you do to, it is something that you want to do to help make a difference. To all of you still working hard to make a difference, developing...

...various activities for the individuals you supervising, and striving to help the community. Thank you.

March is also known as Women's History Month and on March 8th International Women's Day is celebrated as well.
