The mine in the little town of Lucapa

From 1997 until 2008 I've been working in a mine located in north east Angola, province of Lunda Norte. I was working in a small town called Lucapa, in a very remote area. The little town had a cobble way but very little air traffic. In October 2007, we were in the very heart of the rainy season and every day we had huge storms and hard rains, usually pouring from mid afternoon. That particular day, Wednesday October 10, I was outside my office waiting for my workers to finish a work inside one of the buildings. I was roughly looking towards north west at a huge thundercloud that was moving approaching Lucapa. I expected pouring as usual within an hour or so. As I was looking at the cloud, I saw a black circular object flying over the top of the cloud formation. It was moving very slowly and, as I wondered what it was, I tracked every movement to see if the object would reappear out of the cloud but it wouldn't. And I never saw it again. The most interesting thing was that within 30 minutes of the object entering the clouds, the whole cloud system was completely dissipated and I could see an almost clear blue sky, as if the object had absorbed the energy from the stormy clouds to then disappear. Although i never told anyone about this sighting i have always wondered what this could have been.
