CONDOMINIUM SHORT TERM RENTAL REGULATION IN ALBERTA

- ❑ Owners who use those services to get short-term “renters” are considered the same as running a hotel.
- ❑ Alberta Condominium Act will take precedence over any bylaws. Generally all condos in Alberta have a business use bylaw that states that you need explicit board permission to run a business in the condo building. This is legal for a condo board to do.

Canada: An Alberta court has ruled that Airbnb’s offerings cannot operate in a block of condominiums.

This may give legislators wide powers over how to control these offerings due to their similarities to hotels.

The ruling was in response to an Edmonton condominium board banning short-term rentals in its buildings. It said that due to an existing bylaw forbidding commercial activity in condominium properties, boards across the city can remove short-term rentals without adding additional rules.

Erin Berney, condo board attorney, said: “What the decision stands for is that you do not need a specific bylaw targeting Airbnb and short-term accommodations in order to validly restrict or prohibit them. You do not need to go out and pass new bylaws, which is difficult to do in ordinary circumstances.”

On January 1, 2020, revised condominium governance regulations came into effect in Alberta.
