

Finding Myself on the Web

Haylie Hawxhurst

1. Yes, out of the websites and results that came up from typing my name into Google, one of them did surprise me. The one that surprised me was the Hailey Hawxhurst Youtube channel that came up with a video of a heart and some animals that said, "Sending Love". This surprised me because the only major difference, besides the content of the video which I haven't done, was the way the person spelled their name. Aside from that, which I was not expecting to come up, nothing else that came up surprised me.
2. Yes, there were sites that came up that were totally unrelated to me. For example, one of them was a YouTube website page that had a video of animals. I was not expecting this to come up at all when I typed my name into the Google search bar and was therefore surprised when I saw this as one of the results. Aside from this one website that came up that I was not expecting when typing in my name, nothing else came up that surprised me at all. The reason for this I think is because both my first and last names are very unique, especially in the way that they are spelled. There are no other spellings like mine. As a result of being such a unique person and having such a unique spelling to my name, is why I speculate that not much else that was not related to me came up.
3. If someone was doing a web search on me and the websites that came up for me came up for them as well, I think they would be impressed. For example, my LinkedIn page is one of the first sites that came up and when you click on it, it shows right away that I own my own business Haylie's Handmade. Also, they would see from my LinkedIn page that I have been raising money for charity for many years in addition to running my own business and have done charity work.

Second, another interesting search result was the fact that I have done a triathlon. Information about me and the triathlon I did back in 2006 when I was thirteen years old, stood out as an interesting part about me and one that is impressive I think. When you click on the exact link to the article, it mentions my history and also what the triathlon I did covered and how many miles I completed in all of the different activities of swimming, biking and running in how much time.

Finally, with knowing that I've gotten a minor and certificate in addition to my major in college, which also shows up on my LinkedIn page, as well as all of the other aspects of me that have come up from the different websites in addition to LinkedIn, would be impressive because it shows the world and the people searching for me that I'm a well-rounded person who has done a lot in the world, and in my life so far, and that I think would stand out to them.
