Course Description (from the publisher)

Our world revolves around ideas.

Politicians, military leaders, CEOs, media moguls, and academics may think they are in charge of world affairs, but what they think—the ideas in their heads—actually control them.

Ideas are the guiding force behind every twist and turn in public opinion.

They determine what we accept or reject in the arts, media, business, science, education, politics, family, church, and the list goes on endlessly.

We cannot understand what's going on in the world until we look below the surface at the ideas that influence our beliefs and behaviors.

This curriculum is about the ideas that construct our worldviews.

Everyone has a worldview, which helps them interpret what is happening around them.

This course will cover the six prominent worldviews, and will examine those worldviews in light of 10 disciplines.
