How to start a freelance business

If you are tired of being on the employee treadmill now may be the best time to consider freelancing your hard learned skills.

- Are dreams of freelancing dancing through your head?
- Are you thinking of perusing a freelance writing career?
- Is running a work from home business right for you?
- Are you motivated enough to take this challenge and succeed?
- Are you in the right location?

If you answered yes to these questions now is the time to give it a whirl... as Companies scale back on expenses such as benefits and full time employees they are increasing the demand for outside freelance help.

If you got the expertise in the right area there's a good chance you can turn it into a freelance career, by sharing your talents with a variety of clients. Freelance writing is a job you can do from anywhere. Many, freelance writers are working successfully from more distant locations, and in many cases enjoying a better lifestyle in the places where they live

The Internet has made it easier than ever before for freelancers to communicate almost instantly with anyone, anywhere in the world.

As a full time freelancer

- You work when you want.
- Getaways won't have to be confined to weekends and vacations,
- business suits are mostly a thing of the past,
- there is no boss breathing down your neck nagging you to get something done
- No irritating coworkers slacking off at the water cooler driving you nuts.

So if you're looking for a career you can do from anywhere, look no further. Open up your notebook. Start writing. You can begin to build a rewarding career as a freelance writer today.

But in exchange for all the freedom comes risks and insecurity. As a freelancer your next paycheck is never guaranteed. Anxiety about the next job is always a concern that plaques many freelancers.

The seasoned freelancer has learned to deal with the insecurity and makes the best out of it .The best way to ensure your freelance future is to offer a service you know people want Just because you like to do something doesn't mean there is a ready market for it . Follow your heart and do what you love is just a slogan. You need to face reality. If you are not offering a service people are willing to spend money on you're not going to be in business for long.

Search your local paper and internet to see who's hiring in the field you want. Examine your competition, find out what they charge and who are their clients are.

Talk to everyone you know and explain to them what you are doing. Pick the brains of business consultants about market trends and various segments of the market, where the growth is and where most of the work is coming from. All of this information is critical to help you carve out a niche and find the current openings in the market. Years ago companies were able to afford full time people to do the mundane task but today as finances are tight this added overhead has resulted in layoffs and created a void in the companies operation thus opening the door for freelance workers. Small business with limited budgets are also keener on hiring freelancers to help out in running the day activities of the business.

With this in mind freelancing when done right can be a very lucrative business. But don't quit your day job until you are fully set up. Once you have decided what aspect or field you want to pursue take the time to get fully established. The biggest misconception people make is that they are going to jump right in and start making money to live on. It can take months even years to develop a reputation and a client base. This is why most freelancers start out by moonlighting from their current job. It will not happen over night. You need at least six months or a year of savings to survive,

Your freelancing career is only as strong as the sales that you make. By following the following steps you have a good chance to succeed

- Develop a portfolio on the product or services you sell
- Tell everyone you know about your freelancing venture
- Join professional organizations
- Volunteer in your local community
- Do cold calling
- Establish an accounting system
- Build a website
- Know yourself (does this type of life style fit your personality?)
- You must have self discipline
- You need to be able to motivate your self
- Be prepared to work long hours in the beginning

To make money at freelancing it takes more than doing something you love you also need to know how to sell and market your services, you need clients.

Write your own contracts because if the client designs the contract it will be in their favour and could prove to be very costly for you.

Freelancing is a solitary life and a lonely road to travel.

It takes time to grow a freelancing business and establish your self, causing you to have many sleepless nights. But with persistence and a strong determination freelancing can be a very lucrative career.

You need a good business plan set up to help you keep on track.

You be working all kinds of weird hours as you will have to accommodate your clients schedule.

You need to know your industry thoroughly and show confidence in what you are doing.

Always produce high quality workmanship

How to choose what to sell:

- Look at your hobbies.
- Start with something at home.
- What are your personal interests and hobbies? Can you make money from them?
- Tap into your line of work – Do you have a day job?
- What did you learn at School?
- Can you use your knowledge in the retail jungle?

Keep an open mind and generate Ideas.

- Talk to people
- Visit market places
- Visit trade shows
- Look at similar business that are in existence
- Can you fill a void and do better?

Demand

Interest and passion are not enough to build a successful business. You need a demand for the product, you must validate the demand for the product. See if people are actually buying or at least searching for it.

Real magazines trade journals and industry statistics. Make sure your information is accurate and up to date, . This can be obtained from your local government census bureau free of charge from I trade organization magazines and your local library

Often finding a product to sell and determining a demand for it will establish the price but you must also take into account the cost to manufacture or purchase the product initially.

By preparing a good business plan you will be able to address all of these concerns. Plus a good business plan will help you get the start up capital you need.

Plan your business.

Write out a good business plan to ensure smooth operation. Set realistic goals taking into account the start up cost, the competitiveness of the market and how you are going to promote your business.

Get your legal documents in order. Each municipality has different rules and regulations

- Gather your resources ,
- select a good location
- get your tools and equipment in place
- stock the common high quality Supplies
- Set up your suppliers
- Set up a good clean work area
- You need a good static protection system (optional)
- You need an environmentally controlled room

All of these factors will assist you calculating your startup costs.

Decide how you are going to promote your services and the costs involved.

Use the social media to promote your business
Team up with charities to get your name out there.

If you play your cards right you could get a lot of business from the charity event as most of the people want more than the free stuff from the event.
Build a good clientele list maintain a blog always keeping learning to keep your skills up to date practice, practice to continually improve.
