Essentials in summer Travel

What to take

Your passport is a must sunscreen, guidebooks, your camera, and mobile phone. Important travel documents that you must have handy if you plan on crossing several borders on your trip.

Know first aid. You don't need a stiff neck or a fever that's. It pays to be healthy when you're travelling through the fields and observing the sights of another country.

Don't forget your MP3s, guidebooks, extra shirts or lucky hat,

Donot judge without thinking, things will be different than they are at home. Learn to deal with the difference. Respect it. Observe the local traditions, their ways. Observe without passing judgment.

Bring along a sense of humor. There are plenty of surprises when you're on the road. Having the wit to laugh off even the most awful slip-ups or mishaps could keep your trip from turning into a disastrous jaunt, keeping it on a fun and thrilling keel.

Show a little kindness.

Most of the tourist-friendly places in the world aren't first-world countries. They're mostly the poor nations, where good-paying jobs are hard to come by and the majority of people survive on their wit and skills rather than their wealth or trust funds. Residents of these countries often work in the tourism industry to earn a few extra dollars to help out their families. They offer to drive you around, serve as your guide, and provide you with transportation and try to make your stay lovely and pleasant

When it's time to go, don't stiff them. Don't pay them through the nose. They've worked hard to earn a living. While not all guides are hard-working or likable or charming, there are some remarkable ones, the ones who stand out, who were kind to you, who did try to make your stay as fun as possible. Hand over an extra dollar or two if you think their service has been worth it. So long as they've earned it.

It's important to pay them back in kind, in travel and life.

Travel Tips

Traveling — the simple act of going from one place to another has now become one of the world's biggest industries.

It has also developed into one of the more complicated modern activities starting from getting your tickets, preparations, packing, all the way to the airport and immigration and finally to your destination.

From the many travelers that survived traveling, here is a list of tips to help first-time travelers

Before the trip

Search the Internet to know the basics about your destination – banks, money, personal and other insurance, health, vaccinations, language, important customs, weather conditions, their police system and the law.

There is no need to know everything, just the important basics. It pays to have an idea on most things around.

The trip

Before packing anything, make a list on what to bring. This will allow you to take what's necessary (right clothes), (only a jewel item or two and no flashy ones) and what's redundant (big cities have batteries).

And which items to leave out. Keep this list to check on your belongings when you get back home.

Bring a small amount of US dollars (legally acceptable). Most places accept it in case things go wrong with your cards or your other "cash". Bring a small medicine bag in your carry on

- emergency medicines
- aspirins,
- diarrhea tablets,
- water purifiers
- a first aid kit.
- two or three pieces of travel-size personal items of soap, shampoos, deodorants, toothpaste, lotions and perfumes
- (malaria pills, insect repellents, etc.).
- A Swiss knife is very useful as is a small duct tape.
- (due to Security The knife should be in your luggage)

Destination

Line your backpack with chicken wire inside (deterrent for bag slashers). Buy a fake wallet and fill with fake (or expired) cards, etc for muggers. Hide your money somewhere safe with you.

Take taxis at night, even if it's just a short trip.

If you are traveling alone, message boards in the internet list other travelers in your area. Traveler pubs and bars are the best places to meet them.

Be careful with the local food. Allow your stomach to get accustomed to it. Rotate eating foods you know with those of the local cuisine.

Last words

Not everything is bad in your tourist country. You traveled over there because you liked it and you want to enjoy it. This is the time to do it. Just to be careful.
