

Everyone has his or her own ideas of how a boat should be configured in order to maximize enjoyment of the boat and water. Paul had his ideas. He, for example, used a tarp to fend off inclement weather, stowed a jug of moonshine in the boat to sample each time an individual in the boat caught and lands a nice fish, or entertained ladies and children without amittes for a lazy afternoon on a nearby lake. What Cathy and I have done is reconfigure certain aspects of the Wolverine to make it more utilitarian and amenable for us and anyone else, who enjoys experiences on water like fly-fishing, casting lures, drifting bait over shoals or across flats, trolling for salmon, or leisurely cruising or oaring across a placid lake on a quiet afternoon. I think our runabout—Wolverine 77—can accommodate those adventures comfortably and admirably.

Recessional

Figure 23. View showing how graphite tent supports were attached to boat.

