Good morning, students. Today's lecture about the world's population will be in two parts. In the first part, I'll talk about how much the global population is likely to grow over the next 50 years. In the second part, I'll focus on the effects that this growth might have on the environment and the world economy.

1. What will the first part of the lecture be about?

2. What does "population" mean?

a. environment

b. number of people living in a certain area

3. What will happen to the global population?

4. What will the second part of the lecture be about?
