

"Fall" in love with these golf destinations during autumn's changing of the leaves

Mother Nature provides one last hurrah before golf season fades away in the North Carolina Mountains.

If you time it just right, the vibrant colors will explode. Red. Yellow. Orange. Brown. This kaleidoscope, when juxtaposed against a canvass of green grass, looks spectacular.

But for Carolina Golf Journal readers, the primary attractions to mountain golf are lush fairways, sprawling bent grass greens, cool breezes and a gently undulating terrain at public and private golf courses. So daydream with us, as we serve up some of the best fall scenery in the North Carolina Mountains.
