

'Fall' in love with these golf destinations during autumn's changing of the leaves

Mt. Mitchell Golf Club - Burnsville, NC

Maggie Valley Resort and Country Club

Mother Nature provides one last hurrah before golf season fades away in the North Carolina Mountains.

Playing golf during the changing of the leaves is almost a spiritual experience. If you time it just right, the vibrant colors will explode. Red. Yellow. Orange. Brown. This kaleidoscope, when juxtaposed against a canvass of green grass, looks spectacular.

Some states are famous for their fall colors – with North Carolina listed among the best along with Vermont, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota and New York just to name a few. The color band that stretches south into North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama are even more spectacular considering these states just happen to have excellent golf courses, too.

September 22nd marked the first official day of fall, so daydream a bit and celebrate the changing of the leaves on courses close to home. Wherever you are, don't delay in squeezing in those last rounds of fall. As the Game of Thrones warns: Winter is coming. A white golf course just doesn't look the same.

Rumbling Bald Resort on Lake Lure

Sequoyah National Golf Club